What is CRE credit

Commercial real estate (CRE) credit is a form of lending secured by commercial property assets. It provides funding to experienced property developers and investors across the property lifecycle, including acquisition, development, construction, stabilisation and refinancing of commercial real estate projects.

Unlike traditional property investment, where investors own a direct interest in a building or development, CRE credit investors gain exposure to the underlying loan. These loans are secured by the property and sit higher in the capital structure, providing contractual income through interest payments and a defined repayment schedule.

In Australia, CRE credit is commonly referred to as private credit or non-bank lending. It has become an increasingly important source of capital for the property sector, offering investors access to attractive risk-adjusted returns, regular income and diversification from traditional asset classes.

About MaxCap

MaxCap is a specialist real estate credit and equity fund manager, deploying global capital across opportunities in Australia and New Zealand.

For two decades, we have consistently delivered strong, risk-adjusted returns. Bringing together an institutional platform, deep local networks and in-house origination capability, we have access to privileged deal flow driving outperformance through cycles.

This is why global pension funds and insurers trust us to manage their capital. Today, institutional mandates make up more than half of funds under management. In 2021, Apollo Global Management, one of the world's leading asset managers, became a substantial shareholder in our business.

MaxCap's track record

$7bn funds under management and advice

$19bn total invested and advised in credit since inception

800+ loans originated and invested

Fund manager of choice for institutional investors

Built to global pension fund standards in governance and risk management, our platform has managed institutional capital since our first mandate in 2011.

Local expertise informed by a global perspective

A strategic partner of Apollo Global Management since 2011, we combine local market intelligence with a global platform to deliver positive investment outcomes.

Real estate credit specialists, market-leading origination

Unmatched on-the-ground origination capability in five markets across Australia and New Zealand underpins our track record of strong risk-adjusted returns.
